Coffee sack transport in Huila

San Agustin, Huila

Coffees grown in the Huila region are highly sought after and grow in the mountainous terrain of the Colombian Andes. This area is split by the Magdalena River, the principal river of Colombia which takes its name from the biblical figure Mary Magdalene. Much of the San Agustin landscape is sacred, a place of pilgrimage and worship so it's no wonder that coffees grown here are complex and high quality.

The region has year-round rainfall and ambient temperatures which allows coffee to cultivate up to 1,900 meters. The highest altitudes create the trademark Huila acidity and the humidity in lower elevations contribute to bursts of frequent flowering. Wet and Dry processing techniques can embellish some or all flavors. This particular lot is syrupy with a nice touch of citrus.
